The lot is to be used for city improvements, and parts of the walls of old buildings which were torn down still remain. The hoboes erected a shed of timber against one of the walls and set up an old stove, where the dinner was get up by hobo cooks.

Early in the day the itinerants for once justified the boasts of "leff" Davis as to how hard they could work by hauling into the lot tables, chairs, dishes and kitchen utensils, all of which were contributed by two restaurant proprietors who recently went cut of business. The flagging remained on the floors and the place made a good open air kitchen for a mild winter day.

According to an official report from "Jeff" Davis, seventy persons, including several self-effacing "prominent citizens," who do not want their names in the papers, dired on the stew. The hoboes also opened a barber shop in the lot.

"Jeff" Davis thinks the hoboes will
